YOUNG ARTIST RETURNS HOME TO ROMSEY

Young Catholic artist and parishioner of St Joseph's Parish, Tim Patrick, has returned from one of Italy's most beautiful cities to showcase his artistic talents in his home town of Romsey.

Having studied Classical Painting at the Charles Cecil Studios in Florence, Tim will be exhibiting a wealth of drawings from his six month resolve at Romsey's Wisdom House in September. In addition, some other works including his studies of "Stations of the Cross" painted in 2007/8.

“The exhibition is a good opportunity for me to reflect on the work I created in Florence and to give something back to the church and all those who have helped me along the way. I really hope that people can find pleasure in the art I’ve created, and something upon which to contemplate.”

Tim has been raising awareness of his art with previous successful exhibitions at Romsey Abbey and Mayfair’s Dover Street Arts Club in London and hopes that the drawings exhibited will capture the essence of Florence and the time he spent there.

“Studying in Florence was an amazing experience. I’ve learnt so much since I’ve been out there and have really found affinity with the art and lifestyle of the beautiful city.”

The exhibition is at Wisdom House, Romsey will be open from 9.30am until 4.30pm from 7 to 11 September. Also there is a viewing for 3 Rivers parishioners after Holy Mass on Sunday 6th September. Tim also needs to raise funds for his studies and so some of the works will be for sale and commissions taken.

At the end of September Tim will be returning to his studies in Italy after the exhibition. In addition, Tim will be taking up the position of artist-in-residence at a castle in Austria.
